Table 5.1. Course contents and academic activities types

Nuber of Module	Name of the Discipline Section	Name of the Topic		Content of the Topic	Type of Academic Work*
Module 1	Theoretical Foundations of International Marketing Strategies	1.1	International marketing: basic definitions	This topic clarifies key terms such as international marketing, global marketing, transnational company, and export-oriented firm. It focuses on the differences between operating on domestic and foreign markets and on how these definitions influence the choice of strategic marketing approaches.	LC, S
		1.2	Company internationalization as a factor in the development of international marketing	This topic analyses the stages and motives of company internationalisation and their impact on marketing strategy. It considers models of internationalisation (Uppsala, born globals, network approaches) and shows how entering foreign markets changes requirements for marketing planning and implementation.	LC, S
Module 2	Global Marketing Environment	2.1	The global marketing environment	This topic explores the structure and dynamics of the global marketing environment, including economic, political-legal, technological and socio-cultural dimensions. Special attention is paid to how global trends and shocks (crises, sanctions, digitalisation) affect the formation and adjustment of international marketing strategies.	LC, S
		2.2	Micro-, meso- and macro-levels of the international marketing environment	This topic distinguishes between micro-, meso- and macro-environment levels in international marketing and analyses their influence on company decisions. It emphasises the role of competitors, partners, industry structures and national/regional institutions in shaping strategic opportunities and constraints for firms on foreign markets.	LC, S
Module 3	Specifics of Marketing Strategies in International Markets	3.1	Organization and methods of international marketing research	This topic examines approaches to planning and conducting marketing research in foreign markets, including sources of secondary data and methods of collecting primary information. It addresses typical problems of cross-country research comparability and shows how research results are used to justify international marketing strategies.	LC, S

		3.2	Penetration strategies and forms of consolidation in international markets; segmentation of international markets	This topic presents the main strategies and forms of entering and consolidating in international markets (export, licensing, franchising, joint ventures, subsidiaries) and links them with marketing objectives. It also considers principles and criteria for segmenting international markets and selecting target segments for foreign operations	LC, S
		3.3	Positioning strategies in international markets; product and distribution policy in international marketing	This topic focuses on the development of positioning strategies for products and brands in different country markets and on balancing standardisation and adaptation. It analyses how product policy and distribution decisions (channels, partners, logistics schemes) are coordinated to support the chosen international marketing strategy and to take into account local conditions, including the Russian market.	LC, S
